A new state park dedicated to Ohio State University alumnus and Olympic hero Jesse Owens was officially opened today.

Gov. John Kasich was joined by Owens' daughters, athletes from the Ohio State track and field team, and head coaches Urban Meyer and Chris Holtmann at Jesse Owens Memorial Stadium on campus. A separate opening event was held at the park in Morgan County.

"This is going to be the biggest state park in Ohio. Without question, dominating all other state parks," Kasich said.

The first phase of Jesse Owens State Park and Wildlife Area is a 5,735-acre addition to the state's public parkland. Kasich said the park and wildlife area will eventually span more than 13,000 acres in the next three years.

"It's just an honor. Daddy died in 1980, so for him to still be recognized at this point in time is a wonderful thing," said Owens' daughter Beverly Owens Prather.

Owens was raised in Cleveland and was a world record-setting sprinter at Ohio State. Known as the Buckeye Bullet, he won four gold medals at the 1936 Olympic Games in Berlin.

"Jesse Owens was a guy I studied when I was a young boy," said Holtmann, Ohio State men's basketball coach. "I was always so impressed and had so much admiration for his courage and for his trailblazing ways. And for the way that he used his sport to really impact the world."

"This is going to be the biggest state park in Ohio. Without question, dominating all other state parks," Kasich said.

Black holes really just ever-growing balls of string, researchers say

Calculations find a flaw in the firewall argument

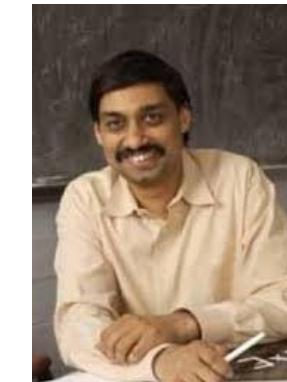

By Misti Crane | crane.11@osu.edu
Assistant Director of Research Communications

Black holes aren't surrounded by a burning ring of fire after all, suggests new research.

Some physicists have believed in a "firewall" around the perimeter of a black hole that would incinerate anything sucked into its powerful gravitational pull.

But a team from The Ohio State University has calculated an explanation of what would happen if an electron fell into a typical black hole, with a mass as big as the sun.

BIG HEADLINE GOES HERE

This would be where we would put a subhead or a story intro or any other kind of descriptor text. We might want it to bleed into a second line. That is why I'm putting this here. Read more.

 We have an obligation to reach out to the people who may not be excited about the science or may not be aware of it and get them involved. Because ultimately this is what Ohio State and TDAI are about.
